Options included in system price

On-site Installation

The quoted system includes on-site installation and training of KVAL's production and maintenance staff in Petaluma, CA. To facilitate integration of the quoted system, TODDCO's offer includes:

- 1-day operator training and maintenance training

Pre-installation procedures will be provided prior to equipment shipment. Installation will be scheduled with customer within two weeks after shipment arrives on location

Kuka Quantec-2 KR 210 R3100-2

TODDCO's Robotics Team will design, build and train a system that utilizes a Kuka robotic arm to automatically pickup doors from a stack on a pallet, place them to be milled, reposition the doors for further milling and place them onto a pallet. All robotic controlled feeds and paths are stored internally ensuring repeatable process control. The Kuka model to be integrated is designed to be used in harsh environments without an environmental protection system.

End of Arm Tool (EAOT)

TODDCO's engineering team will design and deploy a custom Vacuum Gripper EAOT. The EAOT will need to be a custom gripper design and will be designed

Machine Guarding

TODDCO's engineering team will design and implement machine guarding to secure the area to be automated.

Logic Controls and Custom HMI (Human Machine Interface)

TODDCO's programming team will design and employ an Allen-Bradley or Keyence programmable logic controller (PLC) to operate and monitor the inputs and outputs required for the Robotic Material Handling Cell. The PLC will be accessible through a custom HMI. Further details on the HMI can be found above under "Standard HMI Features."

Conclusion

KVAL's Robotic Material Cell will be configured and programmed to meet specific production requirements. The quoted system includes a Kuka Quantec-2 KR 210 R3100-2 robot and standard controller package, a custom vacuum gripper, machine guarding, logic controls and an HMI. To ensure the reliability of the process and to optimize the programming, TODDCO requests samples of the handled materials. The goal will be to design the overall system to be as versatile as possible; however, additional hardware changes may be needed to accommodate future products. Also included in the base equipment price is on-site installation and training.

Because of TODDCO's production-ready philosophy TODDCO recommends that KVAL provide a substantial quantity of parts intended for handling during the debug phase of the project. In addition, a critical design review will be scheduled to review the system design prior to installation. TODDCO's collaborative design review process encourages customer participation for optimum integration performance and quality. This involvement allows KVAL to review all the critical "process specific" components and processes prior to fabrication and/or integration.

Prior to acceptance, KVAL is encouraged to participate in a "buy-off" process to verify that the system will successfully meet the necessary process parameters and that all custom tooling and integrated processes are acceptable for production level materials. After successfully demonstrating that the system meets the process requirements, the customer's representative officially accepts the system. This provides the ultimate security that the banding cell will be "production ready" when our technicians complete the project.

To expedite integration of the Robotic Material Handling Cell into your manufacturing process, TODDCO has included on-site installation and training services. After installing the system in your production facility, training will be provided for operation and maintenance staff. This level of customer service will allow KVAL to rapidly integrate the Robotic Material Handling Cell with confidence.

Thanks for selecting a TODDCO Custom Integration Solution for your critical production requirements. As a U.S. small business manufacturer, TODDCO respects KVAL's commitment to quality production. We look forward to supporting your mission with high quality, durable, factory automation equipment. Please contact us whenever TODDCO may be of service.

Sincerely,
David J. Bratty, Sr.
